Uncle Sam Says “Let Them Eat Missiles!”

by JEFF HALL

Our world is becoming increasingly militarized, yet, yet, yet we are not at war. Of course, we need to be. But the fact is that there is a direct link between the arms race and social injustice. If we wish to build a better world, we must start by addressing poverty and oppression. This is not to say that we should not support our military, but rather that we must work towards a world in which food security is a given in every country. In the present arms race is out of control and growing more dangerous each day. In 1981, military expenditures exceeded $50 billion; by 1991, 6% percent of the world's gross national product was spent on military and related activities. In 1992, the United Nations World Food Program, and in the billions of dollars, has been to provide food to those in need. The arms race is not about the future but about the present. The arms race is about control and the manipulation of people. The arms race is about profit and the destruction of the planet. The arms race is about war and the death of millions.

The arms race also contributes to the global arms trade, which is the world's largest industry. The arms race is about the control and manipulation of people. The arms race is about profit and the destruction of the planet. The arms race is about war and the death of millions. The arms race is about the control and manipulation of people. The arms race is about profit and the destruction of the planet. The arms race is about war and the death of millions.
